At a time of astonishing enlightenment in 1993, I knew I didn't really know exactly how and why I had made all the money I had during the previous 17 years, he wrote once. That threw my confidence for a jolt. And with Paul Tudor Jones' quote above, Morgan Housel jumps into his thoughts on the nature of risk and luck (which one should read immediately). Unlike Jones, I don't have 17 years of experience (and much less success) — however, I've had (and still have) moments when I wonder if I understand the risk at all. Understanding risk in public markets is difficult, but supposedly possible. Public companies will set the daily price, and discuss their financial health quarterly, which the financial press finds interesting. Private companies price, well, whenever they price. Your investors may have the right to receive financial statements from their portfolio companies, and investors (limited partners) must have the right to receive financial statements for the global portfolio. However, as private, investors and their limited partners will receive financial statements months after the end of a quarter, or semester, or year, depending on each time companies agree to report. Although this reporting delay is a feature and not an error of private companies, it makes the issue of risk more difficult to understand. Further complicating this the fact that investors often have restrictions around how assets they can be in managing their holdings in private companies (either through getting involved in operations, or even selling the stake). The same goes for limited partners who manage their holdings in funds, which means that if you decide that the risk of maintaining a private investment exceeds any potential return, you will have a difficult and/or bad time trying to sell it. While tracking a risky private investment remains a very useful exercise, its value lies mainly in teaching the parties involved what not to do in the future. If the remedies available to private investors in their risky investment management are limited, then actual risk mitigation should take place on the front end. That is, before the actual investment has been made. This requires analyzing the people, products, markets, etc. involved, and in the context of risk will lead to the following questions: have the founders/investors demonstrated prior success in implementing this specific strategy, been consistent in their results and how do they protect against negative results? Strategies such as investment control, growth capital, and struggling venture capital/investment may differ in the way they judge risk and ultimately performance, but answers to the above-mentioned questions should lean more towards yes than no. And in cases where those answers are tilted towards no, there has to be a rational explanation or else one should not trust the story of that founder/investor, which would be a problem, since investing everything) requires confidence. However, strong performance has a way of making limited investors and partners overlook poor strategies. And if that happens in fact, those investors or limited partners may wake up and realize that they don't understand how or why they succeed. Or just above average. If you have a blocked phone number, your name and number will not appear on the caller's caller ID screen when you make outgoing phone calls. However, you can unlock your call-by-call information by making outgoing phone calls. Typically, unlocked phone numbers will display the name and number associated with the phone line on caller ID screens when making outgoing phone calls. Pick up the phone. Dial *82 with your phone's keyboard. Enter the phone number you want to call to connect to and unlock caller ID information. With the Snapchat social messaging app, users can control the snaps and content they see. It's easy to block someone on Snapchat if you no longer want to receive their messages or make them see your content. But if you have a change of heart, you can unlock that person and re-engage with each other on Snapchat. These instructions apply to the Snapchat app on iOS and Android devices. Kaley McKean/Lifewire Because blocking people on Snapchat hides their accounts from you and yours from them, you can't search for their names and then unlock them. Instead, you'll need to access your list of blocked users from Snapchat settings. Here's how to unlock someone on Snapchat: Open Snapchat and tap your Bitmoji or username in the top left corner of the screen. Tap the gear icon in the upper-right corner to access Settings. Swipe up to see the Account Actions section, then tap Locked. You'll see a list of usernames for the people you blocked. Tap the X to the right of the username of the person you want to unlock. Snapchat asks you to confirm. Tap Yes if you want to unlock this person. After you unlock someone, their username disappears from your blocked list. The lock cuts off all contact between you and the blocked user, and the person is removed from your friends list. After unlocking, you'll need to find the friend and add them again. To do this, type the user name in the search field at the top, and then tap Add to the right of the profile picture and user name. If the friend is not a public user, they also need to add you again. Below is the some of the most frequently asked questions and answers about unlocking someone on Snapchat. Snapchat has been known to put time restrictions on users who re-add friends who have recently deleted or blocked them. Therefore, if you blocked, unlocked, and tried to re-add them in no time, Snapchat might prevent you from regrouping them for 24 hours. Snapchat doesn't notify users when you block or unlock them, but I could find out. For example, if someone notices that your account has disappeared, they might search for you from another Snapchat account and confirm that it's blocked. If they see a new friend request from you, they may realize that you are adding them again. Instead of temporarily cutting off all contact with someone and then re-adding each other as friends, mute the notifications. When you enable this option for any friend, they will remain on your friends list. You'll still receive snapshots and chats, but without any of the notifications that come with those snapshots. To mute a Snapchat user's notifications, open their contact page by selecting the image next to their name. Once you're on their contact page, use the three-dot menu at the top to select Message Notifications. Choose Silent. Turn this feature on or off at any time without your friend knowing, and enjoy the freedom to open your photos and chats as you please. Did you mistakenly block someone on Instagram? Maybe you blocked your boss or wanted to stop someone from being notified about your Instagram posts, but just for a while? There are many reasons to block, and so many to unlock someone on Instagram. No matter what your reasons, the steps to unlock are easy. These instructions apply to the latest version of the Instagram mobile app and desktop website. To remove someone from your list of blocked users on Instagram using the Instagram app for all supported versions of iOS (iPad and iPhone), Android (Samsung, Google, etc.) and Windows: Find the blocked user on Instagram. You can use the ACCOUNTS tab of the search bar to isolate search only on user accounts. Tap the profile you want to unlock. Tap Unlock and confirm that you really want to unlock the user. You can now see the user's profile where you can choose to follow them if you want. To unlock a user who uses the Instagram website on a computer with their desktop web browser: visit Instagram on your browser's website. Sign in to your Instagram account if you're not already signed in. Select Search. Enter the user name of the account or the name of the person you want to unlock. Now select the desired user from the autocomplete suggestions. Instagram may display the user account as unavailable. In this case, you need to unlock the account using the Instagram app for iOS or Android; see above. Select Unlock and confirm that you really want to unlock the user. That's all! Now you can follow the user you just unlocked on Instagram. Yes, Instagram keeps a list of all the profiles you've blocked. To view it in the Instagram app for iOS or Android: You can't access the blocked users on the Instagram website, so you'll need to use the app. Go to your Instagram profile page. Tap the menu button, then select Settings. Select Privacy, and then select Blocked Accounts. Tap any locked user to reach your profile, where you can unlock them by following the instructions above. When unlocked unlocks Instagram account, restrictions associated with someone's lock are lifted. They will be able to find it again using Instagram search. They can see your posts and stories again. They will be able to follow you again (this will not happen automatically, however). They can send you private messages using Instagram Direct again. The user will not be notified when unlocking them. If you have allowed direct messages from the user before, you will also receive all the messages they sent in the meantime. If you haven't exchanged direct messages with them, the user's first message after unlocking them will only appear as a request in Instagram Direct. Lifewire/Ellen Lindner If you've blocked someone on Instagram, you've also stopped following them, and new posts or stories won't appear on your Instagram feed. You also can't follow a locked account until you've unlocked it. To follow the user again after unlocking it: Find and open the user's profile on Instagram. This works on Instagram apps for iOS and Android as well as it does on the web. Select Follow. Trying to unlock someone who, in turn, has blocked you on Instagram can be a frustrating and, unfortunately, generally fruitless experience. This is because you are prevented from viewing the account and need to access the account menu to unlock it. Your best bet is a @mention, for example, in a private message to that user from your own account: Tap the Instagram Direct icon (a paper plane) on Instagram for iOS or Android. Tap the pencil icon to start a new message. Type your Instagram username in To, select your account from the list, then tap Chat. In the Message field, type , followed by the user name of the account that you want to unlock. For example, for the barackobama user, type: @barackobama. Tap Submit. Now tap the username highlighted in the message you just sent. Open the user profile menu (on iOS and : on Android). Select Unlock from the menu that appeared and confirm your choice. If the person has changed their username since you blocked it, you will not be able to unlock it with this method. If the direct message trick doesn't work for you, here are a few more ways to try to access the account you want to unlock: Instagram search. Type the direct profile page address (in a web browser. Find a post you liked. Find a photo or video you've privately saved to your account or collection. The above methods may be inaccessible depending on the application and platform you are using. Depending on the app or website, it may not be possible to unlock Instagram profiles that have been deleted or deleted that blocked them. Their names will appear in your list of blocked accounts with no way to interact with them. If possible, try the Instagram app on a different platform. We have seen Instagram for Android capable of unlocking users that the Instagram website and iOS app reported as non-existent or One thing you can do to avoid outdated accounts in your instagram blocked account list is to report suspicious accounts and activity to Instagram (Report & It's Spam or Report & It's inappropriate in the user's menu) instead of blocking users that you think are fake accounts.
